NOTES:

- 1) When you first create a Hive, it is totally private. The owner has full access but that's it.
- 2) When you first edit permissions, only the Special rows are populated.
 - a) the Owner has all permissions and they are not editable
 - b) the Guests row has read only and only shows up if the community is public or preview and the user has the HivesPublish power
 - c) the Registered Users row has all permissions unchecked
 - d) My Network is something we'll tackle later

NOTES:

- 1) These are examples of Hive Types you can create w/o specifying any member groups or users.
- 2) Private_Community is in the Read_Write format, meaning one person can post and registered users can read.

NOTES:

1) When you click an add link at right (in this case the HiveLive group), the user or group is removed from the add panel and added to the permissions grid w/ no permissions. Once it's added, you can set permissions.

NOTES:

1) Currently, when you click add or remove or add a user or group by name, the page refreshes. With a bunch of checkboxes, you could lose permission settings by adding or removing members. Yikes. In the short term, we could keep track if you've changed something in javascript and prompt you on an add or remove.

2) The 'Save' button saves the form and refreshes the page. The 'Save & Exit' button saves and returns to the Hive settings tab.
